"INDUSTRIALISATION AND URBANISATION - A CASE STUDY OF CITY BELGAUM CORPORATION"

Executive Summary

1. IMPORTANCE OF THE STUDY:

Urbanisation is a process by which rural population shifts to urban areas and stays there. Development is associated with a shift of population from traditional to modern sectors and movement of population from primary to secondary and finally to tertiary sector. Development sometimes is measured in terms of percentage of population found in these three sectors at the beginning and at the end of the growth period. Urbanisation hence, is also one of the indices by which development in the country is judged.

In over populated and under developed countries, transfer of population from rural to urban is considered as one of the remedies. With the siphoning of population from agriculture sector or rural sector to urban sector, its pressure on it would be reduced leading to improvement in the productivity of land and also of labour engaged in it. At the same time urban centres absorb this excess population coming from the rural sector and by offering it gainful employment in factories and other establishments raise the marginal productivity of erstwhile surplus population from agriculture. Thus urbanisation helps rural sector indirectly.

Urban centres with their variety of production and consumption activities not only cater to the consumption needs of the growing population but also employ labour in a variety of activities. This process helps in raising the income and consumption of the community and ultimately the standard of the living of the people residing in it.

Historically religious places, capitals of kingdoms, places of historical importance, places where trade fairs were held attracted the economies of the most developed countries as in the least developed countries.

Even in India maximum industrial output is from industries and they also employ highest number of labourers. As per the census of registered and unregistered units held for the year 20011-12, there were 305.21 lakhs industrial units in the country, out of which 73.75 lakhs were registered working units and 131.46 lakhs unregistered units. Their contribution to production was Rs.3,82,270 Crores, to export was Rs.101,244 Crores and to employment was 349.09 lakh persons.

Therefore the role of industries in urbanisation with special reference to Belgaum City Corporation in Karnataka, is studied. Belgaum is one of the big cities in the region known as Bombay Karnataka in the state of Karnataka.

2. STUDY AREA:

Belgaum City Corporation is one of the important City Corporation of Karnataka State. It is the fourth largest in terms of area and population in the state. This city corporation is known for industrial units specially engineering and foundry units. Engineering units manufacturing Hydraulic products, automobile spares and parts etc. Some of the engineering units of Belgaum are ancillaries of renowned manufacturers of automobiles like Bajaj, Mahendra and Mahendra, Maruti Udyog. The study concentrates on industries and their impact on urban development of Belgaum City Corporation and vice versa.

The study has chosen Belgaum City Corporation. It has gathered information from 201 industries falling in ten different categories comprising 8 different industrial areas, estates and general area.

Industries are divided in to 10 different categories like Mineral Based Industries, Forest Resource Based Industries, Agro and Food Based Industries, Polymer and Chemical Based Industries, Engineering and Non Conventional Power Industries, Cloth Industries, C.I.

1. INTRODUCTION:

Urbanisation is a process by which rural population shifts to urban areas and settles there. Development is associated with a shift of population from traditional to modern sectors and movement of population from primary to secondary and finally to tertiary sector. Development sometimes is measured in terms of percentage of population found in these three sectors at the beginning and at the end of the growth period. Urbanisation hence, is also one of the indices by which development in the country is judged.

In over populated and under developed countries, transfer of population from rural to urban is considered as one of the remedies. With the siphoning of population from agriculture sector or rural sector to urban sector, its pressure on it would be reduced leading to improvement in the productivity of land and also of labour engaged in it. At the same time urban centres absorb this excess population coming from the rural sector and by offering it gainful employment in factories and other establishments raise the marginal productivity of erstwhile surplus population from agriculture. Thus urbanisation helps rural sector indirectly.

respect. It pleaded for more Railway facilities, more Railway links with interior, increased number of Trains and better asphalted Roads in the City, proper drainage facilities, continuous supply of power etc., These need immediate attention.

8. With the growth of urbanisation and industrialisation many Metropolitan centres are facing problems of pollution, congestion etc., Therefore advance planning is necessary to provide necessary arrangements to contain pollution and avoid congestion. Advance urban planning is a must. That is to say post-development urbanisation problems have to be imaginatively thought of and attended to. Afforestation, good motorable roads, new extensions, percolation of rainwater into the ground and not allowing it flow away, so that, helping to raise the level of subsoil water etc., are some of the remedies.

9. The authorities should choose high employment industries and areas for encouragement and guide them for smooth and problem free development.

6. CONTRIBUTION TO THE SOCIETY:

Details: Industries have become the engine of growth. Even today, industries represent 80 percent of industrial enterprises in both developed and developing countries. In India, two-third of industrial output is from Industries and they employ highest number of people.

In addition to providing employment to maximum number of workers, Industries help in reducing concentration of wealth and income, regional imbalances, overcoming shortage of capital, reducing pressure on agriculture etc., Hence, the government has rightly undertaken the programmes of encouraging and developing Industries in Belgaum City Corporation.
